"Dear Mr. Thomas," it ran, "I trust you will not consider this a piece of interference on my part, but I thought it necessary for you to know that your little ward. Eva Gresham, has now reached the age of five, without once having seen the face of her guardian. I am anxious to know what you intend to do in the way of her education, and thought perhaps you would better judge by coming down to see her. Yours faithfully.

"HOSE HERSCHEL."

"A boarding school!" The color deepened suddenly in Miss Herschel's check and her eyes flashed indignantly. "A boarding school," she repeated, warmly, "for a delicate child like that! Sonsense! She wouldn't live a month of it. Besides. I love her, and cannot part with her."

The haughtiness and assurance with which she spoke surprised and irritated Mr. Thomas, who considered himself a masterful man, in his way.

"Indeed," he said dryly. "But the future of the child must be considered before personal desires."

"She could go to a day school about here, or—or I could spare time to teach her."

ROSE HERSCHEL.

It was very annoying. Lestie Thomas threw out the letter impatiently on the table and gazed for some time into the giowing embers of his bachelor in the giowing embers of his bachelor in the giowing embers of his bachelor.

What had he done—he, a sober-minded single man, to be saddled with a child for the rest of his days; he, who distiked children, to be the guardlan and protector of a girl who was nothing to him until she should arrive at an age to take care of herself? Yet he hall promised the child's father.

They were insulting words, and Lestie ing school and Miss Impudence about her business. She has had a nice, soft time of it, looking after that child, and now, perhaps, she will be sorry she had a finger in the ple."

That was how Mr. Lesile Thomas found himself the following afternoon outside a snug little villa at Sevenoaks. He hesitated before knocking. The cottage, he thought, looked rather fine for such humble inhabitants, and yet there was the name written up over the porch right enough—Woodbine Cottage—in big gill letters, Filmy lace curtains fluttered at the windows, through which a glimpse of a daintily furnished room could be seen. The window boxes were gay with flowers, and the whole house had a thoroughly well-kept appearance. In some surprise Eva's guardian reached up and knocked at the door, wondering in spite of himself that he had never had the curfosity to venture here before. The door was opened by a spruce, mald, to whose skirts clums of the place in the place of the said, "She's a little mite," he said, "I suppose a mald, to whose skirts clums of the place of the said, "I suppose here a debt of gratings us together, and for that child?"

NFANT MORTALITY is semething frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die besore they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fi.teen.

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints, contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poison. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.
